. "THE SPIRIT" OF '76. A correspondent, writing of haring at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, says: "One day, about two months ago, when a certain member of the third class was superintendent of one of the floors, a well-developed plebian came along the entry whistling. At the sight of his superior officer he ceased, as he was in duty bound. The superintendent, with an insolent desire of displaying hi sauthority over a fellow larger than himself, ordered him 'to do it again." The than himself, ordered him 'to do it again.' The plebe, well knowing that he would be 'spotted' for compliance, remained stient; whereupon the temporary official declared that if he would not obey he should be made to do so. Nothing however, could be done at that moment, so the youngster was allowed to go his way.

"That night nineteen third-class men entered his room and 'passed him round;' that is, they formed a ring into which the offender was drawyed, and pashed roductly formed.

dragged, and pushed violently from one-to-another, always falling against two or three-strong hands that pushed him back again before he had time to take breath, and thus he was buffeted from side to side by nineteen was buffeted from side to side by nineteen pairs of muscular arms until this great stal-wart lad, nearly six feat tall, fainted from ex-haustion. The hazers then departed, climbing out of the windows and siking down the poets of the veranda. The first-class man who was on duty that night caught a glimpse of these forms descending in a suspicious manner, and, having taken an observation of the window from whence they came, went to the number. having taken an observation of the window from whence they came, went to the unlucky plebe's room and found him insensible.

"He was resuscitated and questioned. As first he was unwilling to tell any takes, but after a thorough investigation the truth was ascertained, and the matter was laid before the Government, who at once adopted most decisive measures. The whole third class was quarantined from the beginning of April to the end of the year; that is, for two months and a half they have not a moment's recreation. All their hours of pleasure are forfeited. While the other classes are playing foot-ball or taking the young ladies out to row the boys of '76 are working away at extra drills; when the others have half an hour's lefsure to go to the library or run into a friend's room they are prisoners in their own apartments.

in their own apartments. "The nineteen who were engaged in the affair just mentioned in addition to being quaran-tined, are ordered on the practice cruise this tined, are ordered on the practice cruse this summer; losing thereby the only leave of absence that they have during the whole four years of their academic course—the one visit home to which so many toats have been drunk and so many songs sung, which is looked forward to and looked back upon from the time they enter the academy until the time they leave it."
